UK Outlook for Friday 4 Jun 2021 to Sunday 13 Jun 2021:
Rather mixed conditions expected at the start of the period, with a good deal of fine weather around although equally cloud and outbreaks of rain tending to gradually work its way in from the west. There also remains a risk of thunderstorms, especially in the far east and south-east, accompanied by very warm or hot conditions. Otherwise, temperatures will tend to be nearer the seasonal average, warm in the sunnier spots. Into the following week, a trend towards more settled and dry conditions overall, at least for a time, but both how quickly this arrives and how long it lasts are both very uncertain, with an increasing chance of unsettled conditions with wind and rain for north-western areas by the end of the period.
